After providing for working committees of the extra session they will consider the tariff bill as introduced by the Ways and Means Committee.

The principal problem confronting the House leaders, who are listening to members of the Senate for the sake of harmony, is whether the bill should be reported in the House in its entirety or schedule by schedule. Democratic Senators who oppose the sugar schedule with its provision for free sugar in three years object to consideration of the tariff as one bill.

Though no decision has been reached there was a probability to-day that the House caucus might determine finally to segregafe the sugar schedule, taking up all the other schedules and the inseme tax as ene bill. It also was probable that the question of the method of consideration might not be determined by the caucus, but be taken up on the floor of the House after the bill had been reported from the Ways and Means Committee.
